Carranza's headquarters at Vera Cruz could justify.

Although it is known that Administration officials are disposed to regard all such defis from Carranza as a species of cheap bluster, intended for "home consumption" in Maxico. The Times learned today from reliable sources that Carranza has something more than mere arrogance to support his threats.

Insurgents Surrender. It was learned, for example, that since the Pan-American conference assembled to bring about a restoration of peace in Mexico, numerous bands of insurgents in Mexico, who have been fighting Carranza, have surrendered to him with the single stipulation that they be given opportunity to serve under the first chief in resisting American invasion.

Although members of the Carranza agency declined to confirm or deny information, several of them this information, several of them asserted with more than their custom-ary emphasis that Carransa is ready ary emphasis that Carrana is ready to fight rather than agree to any program for peace which would rob him of the fruits of his recent widespread military victories. They still express hope that the United States and the other powers will find it best to recognize Carranas.

An auxiliary military camp for Washington business men.

Such is the hope of Ge. William E. Harvey, commanding the District National Guard, for next year's encampment, and he is watching with great interest the outcome of a similar experiment now being made at the Plattsburg (N. Y.) maneuver grounds, where the annual field work of the New York militia is in progress.

"If the business men of Washington show any inclination to become interested in a project of this kind," said out for them.

"Great results might be obtained in a matter of national preparedness if the substantial men of each city who cannot give sufficient of their time to permit them to become regular members of a militia organization could, through an auxiliary camp, obtain sufficient training to make them of some practical use in time of emergency.

Needed for Emergency, "Of course, I am a little doubtful as yet as to the degree of practical training which could be given to business men during so short a period, but I am inclined to bilieve that it would be a very good thing. "In had intended to go to Plattaburg before the close of the encampment, to look over the manner in which things are being done there, but I am afraid that the encampment will be over long before our militia is back from its camp.

before our militia is back from its camp. If that is the case, I will have to content myself with consulting officers who were at Plattsburg.

"Suppose the present District guard were ordered away from her suddenly on active service. Another organization would have to be gotten together. And what better material for it than substantial business men with at teast some knowledge of military matters? That, I believe, will prove to be at least one excellent reason why a business men's auxiliary camp next year ness men's auxiliary camp next year will prove a success."

> Vigorous attack was made in two quarters today on the assertion made by officers of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company that their entire fleet of five steamers in the Pacific trails had been sold to the Atlantic Transport Company and withdrawn from the company and withdrawn from the trans-Pacific trade to escape the onerous provisions of the seamen's lew.
> At the Department of Commerce it was emphatically stated that the Panama canal act, more than the seamen's act, was responsible for the Pacific Mail Company's withdrawal from trans-Pacific trade, owing to the new competi-tion opened up by the trade between Atlantic ports and the Orient through the canal. The Pacific Mail Company is debarred from use of the canal because of railroad ownership.

> "Pidgin" English Gets O. K. Commerce officials said also that the objection raised by the Pacific Mail Company to the seamen's act, the provision requiring 75 per cent of the crew to "be able to understand any orcrew to "be able to understand any orders given by the officers of vessels."

> English," sufficient to understand orders in line of duty, is all that is required by this section. Without ability to understand the language to this > extent the employment of doolie laborers would be dangerous on ships, officials said.

Word was received at National Guard headquarters today that there is an effort afoot to organize a coast artillery company among the student body of the George Washington University. A letter signed by E. F. Collier, of the seaman's law, upheld the provisions of the law requiring members of the output of this by-product of the crew to understand the language of their ships officers, declaring that illiterate crews not only were in being $56,900. school, came to Adjutant General Cast-ner, of the militia, seeking information us to the formation of such a company. Ifficials expressed the opinion that the greater renumeration to be gained in trans-Atlantic trade during the war was another reason for the action of the Pacific Mail Company indisposing of its five liners, the Manchuria, Mon-golia, Korea, Siberia and China, at a price said to be between $7,000,000 and $8,500,000.
